CECILE DURANTON

MANAGING DIRECTOR
TIME FOR THE PLANET

I'm an agronomy engineer passionate about agriculture and food systems. I have lived and worked in several countries in the past 10 years and got involved in climate change until making it my first mission. Now, I design and execute the international strategy of Time for the Planet, a non-profit citizen fund tackling climate change. I want to share how we can combine entrepreneurship, communities, open-source models, and collective intelligence to deploy the climate innovations we need as fast as possible.
